The iPad has some problems charging via USB on older Apple computers or PCs. This is caused by the power output by PCs or older Apple computers is not enough to charge the iPad. But with a little iXP1-500 iPad adapter, you can charge directly the iPad from the USB port of your PCs or older Apple computers; eliminating the hassle having to connect to a wall outlet.

The iXP1-500 iPad adapter is a product of Xmultiple Technologies Inc, which addresses the issues and some motherboards of PCs and has released new drivers that allow charging of the iPad via the USB port of PC.

This adapter has a male USB type A connector that connects to the USB 2.0 port of your PC. And a female USB type A connector at the other end that attaches to your Apple charge/sync cable's male USB Type A connector. Once connected, your iPad is guaranteed to be charged via the USB port without any problem.

This little iPad adapter costs less than $5, which should come in handy, help eliminate the hassles of having to look around for power outlet while you need to charge your iPad.
